Semester I: 1986-1987

History 102  U.S. since 1865  Professor McCormick
Ms. Fitzgerald

COURSE DESCRIPTION:
An interpretative treatment of American history since the Civil War that focuses on POWER: who has it and who resists it? The unifying theme is the triumph of industrial capitalism and a new industrial order; the varying responses of those disadvantaged by that new order -- especially industrial workers, sometimes farmers, and increasingly women and minorities; and the counter-responses of corporate elites, especially the effort to rationalize (make more rational and planned) the economy at home and expand American material and strategic presence (imperialism?) abroad. Lectures heavily stress economic policy and foreign affairs with an occasional foray into labor history. Sections will put a supplemental stress on women's history and ethnic-racial minorities.

LECTURES:
Two per week. 75 minutes each. Discussion encouraged.
