History 327 Capitalism, Socialism and Democracy Mr. Hollingsworth in America Since 1890

A major concern of this course is to analyze the changing nature of American capitalism and political institutions during the twentieth century and to study how they are distinctive and similar to institutions in other highly industrialized societies. The course will devote particular attention to the changes in the institutional arrangements which have altered the nature of American capitalism since the late nineteenth century. In addition, the lectures will explore how the institutional arrangements in American society have influenced the performance of the economy.

Students in this course should emerge with an understanding of the (1) inherent tensions between democratic and capitalist institutions, and (2) the persisting crises which are inherent in capitalist systems.

This course has two basic concerns: (1) to analyze the political and economic institutions which have emerged in the United States since 1890, and (2) to analyze how these institutional arrangements have influenced various types of social and economic policies which have been implemented since the Second World War.

The first part of the course will focus on the social, economic, and political arrangements which had become highly institutionalized by 1940. The second part will focus on how these institutional arrangements placed constraints on the formation and implementation of public policies after 1940. In addition, substantial attention will be devoted throughout the course to analyzing what groups have benefited by the social, economic, and political arrangements in the United States since 1890.

There is no single textbook which covers the materials in the course. However, each student is advised to purchase James Weinstein, The Corporate Ideal in the Liberal State. Those students who have a deficient background in American history should obtain a general textbook on twentieth century American history and read it along with the specific assignments during the course.

The bulk of the reading will consist of xeroxed essays which you should purchase from one of the photoduplication shops near the campus. These will be prepared in a packet, and the shop which has prepared these will be announced at the beginning of the semester.

As this is a four credit course, there will be frequent discussion sections which each student is required to attend.

There will be two written assignments during the semester, each being a take-home examination on which you will have several days to work. (It has been my experience that students learn much more from take-home examinations than from in-class exams.) Each take-home examination should be carefully written in essay form and demonstrate a mastery of the subject matter. The first examination will be given on October 20 and will be due October 27. The second exam will be given on December 8 and will be due on December 15. Except in the case of extreme emergency, there will be no incompletes in the course. All work must be completed by the date indicated above.

Grading Policy:

Class Participation (20 percent)
First Take Home Examination (35 percent)
Second Take Home Examination (45 percent)
