Course Description:
This course deals with the interaction between the legal system and social change in what is now the United States. Legal history involves not only the history of statutory law and of lawsuits and trials that test those laws, but also the social history of the impact of the law and the political history of efforts to change laws. Our course will look at the ways that the organizations and administration of the law has changed throughout American history and the ways that the law relates to issues of rights, citizenship, state formation, social relations and nationhood. At the same time, we will study how cultural and political forces, including race, gender, class, sexuality and religion have influenced legal regimes. Throughout this course, we will devote considerable attention to understanding historical methodologies and competing interpretations of legal history.

Readings:
Class readings consist of both primary and secondary material. Most documents will be in the Kermit Hall collection. Others can be found on e-Reserve. You should purchase the following two books from A Room of One’s Own bookstore at 307 W. Johnson St.:

Assignments and Grading:
This course emphasizes writing. You will have four written assignments. The first three will ask you to consider the many possible interpretations of a different period in legal history: the colonial era and the transition to an independent republic, the early republic before the Civil War, and the turn of the century. Your final paper in this class will be a synthetic analysis of the course – I’d like you to write the final lecture of this class and discuss the various themes and threads of change that shape the changing nature of the law throughout. Each assignment will be worth 25% of your total grade.
