History 377: History of Africa, 1500-1870

The course is an introduction to the history of Africa south of the Sahara during the era of the slave trade. Since it is not possible to undertake a systematic survey of the period -- the continent is too vast and our data too sparse -- we will focus on a number of common themes in the cultural and historical development of African societies. We will start with an introduction to African cultures and the problems in studying them. We will then explore three interrelated themes: trade, state formation, and the spread of Islam in the 16th-18th centuries. We will then turn to the slave trade and its impact on Africa and the Americas. Finally, we will close with a study of the impact of European settlement on South Africa.

This is also a course in historical reconstruction and analysis. There are few documentary sources for this period and much of the data we have is fragmentary. The resulting history consists largely of long-term social changes rather than detailed narrative. We must thus learn to reconstruct history from what evidence is available, using general principles of African social, economic, and political organization that we will develop in class. This is a challenging task, and it will take some time for it to make sense to you.

Course Requirements: (1) Attendance at lectures and active participation in discussion sections (25%), (2) a map quiz, (3) two mid-terms and a final exam (25% each). Undergraduate students taking the course for honors and graduate students will also be expected to write three short discussion papers (one in weeks 1-5, one 6-10, and one 11-15), each on a particular reading assignment. You may choose the assignment you wish to write on, but you must hand in your paper in the section discussing that assignment. Graduate students are also encouraged to read the recommended reading (denoted by an *) in lieu of the required reading.

Reading: Lectures and discussion sections will presume knowledge of the readings. They should thus be completed before the class for which they are assigned. Much of the material will be unfamiliar to you and some of the readings are quite difficult. Use the questions in the syllabus to guide your reading and prepare for the discussions of it. All required and recommended readings are available on Reserve in the Helen C. White library. The following books are also available at the University Book Store:
