This course is an introductory survey to the history of Africa south of the Sahara from the eve of the European colonization to decolonization. Given the vast geographical breadth of the African continent, the diversity of its people and the divergent trajectories of colonial rule, we will not attempt to give a comprehensive overview of Africa between 1870 and the present. Instead, we will consider a variety of perspectives and case-studies to highlight the diversity of Africa at the end of the nineteenth century, and major historical processes at work in the twentieth century.

The course will primarily foreground African actors and the strategies of African individuals, households, and communities. In so doing, we will move beyond notions of the monolithic and all-powerful colonial and postcolonial state, and the nameless, faceless victimized African masses. This is not to discount the oppressive and exploitive measures employed by the colonial state, nor the constraints of violence and poverty in present-day Africa. Rather, it is to emphasize how Africans actively participated in inventing their own history.
Course Requirements and Grading: (1) Participation in discussion sections, including participation in and presentation of one food group (30%), (2) a map quiz (not graded), (3) a 3-page (double spaced) essay on the movie by Henry Louis Gates, Slaving Kingdoms (10%), a 3-page (double spaced) on the novel by Tsitsi Dangarembga, Nervous Condition (10%), and a 1 to 2-page (double spaced) response paper on Ngugi Wa Thiongo, Grain of Wheat (part of discussion section’s grade) (4) one take-home paper (5-page, double spaced) due in class on 03/03. The topic for the paper will be handed out in class ahead of time and will address course contents from weeks 1-6 (30% total), (5) a final exam on course contents and material discussed in weeks 8-16 (20%). (6) Extra credit can be earned by writing an essay one of the other movies presented in class.

Graduate students should consult with instructor for special requirements.
