Course Meetings and Requirements:

We require all undergraduate students to attend two (75-minute) lectures and one (50-minute) discussion section per week.

There will be a mid-term and a final examination, both in essay format. The mid-term will be given on March 13th and will cover lectures and readings for Sections I-III of the course.

Writing Assignment:

All undergraduate students enrolled in the course will write one short (4-7 pages) essay-review based upon a sufficient variety of materials to allow analysis of differing viewpoints on the subject; for example one monograph and three journal articles, or two monographs, or five or six journal articles. Reading for the essay-review will be in addition to that required for the course in general. We will hand out in class a format for the essay-review as well as suggested readings arranged by topic. Undergraduate students interested in doing an original research paper rather than the essay-review may do so, after consultation with either the instructor or the Teaching Assistant. All graduate students will write an original research paper.

Readings:

The specific order of reading assignments will be given in discussion sections. The first book to be discussed will be Warner's Streetcar Suburbs; we urge class members to begin reading that book soon.

Grading Policies:

Grades will be based upon performance on the examinations, the writing assignment, and attendance at and participation in the discussion sections. Improvement over the semester will find its reward; in cases where a student's final grade hovers between two possibilities, the higher grade will be given if the student has shown steady improvement over the semester.

To allow as much flexibility as possible, we will not give now any hard-and-fast mathematical formula for grading. But, so that you can have some idea of the process, we will allocate grades based roughly upon these percentages: mid-term 25%; final 30%; essay-review 30%; discussion section 15%. Again, this is only a rough estimate and may change during the semester depending upon our evaluation of overall student performance in the course.
