This course will explore the history of work, workers, and working class culture in twentieth century America. We will focus on how men and women have shaped, and in turn have been shaped by, socio-economic and technological change both in and out of the workplace. We will discuss a wide variety of issues including: workers' perceptions of major historical events (such as the World Wars and the Depression), workers' attitudes towards new modes of production (such as scientific management, the assembly line, computers, and robotics), the organized labor movement and its relationship to twentieth century politics and government, and the pivotal roles played by race and gender and ethnicity in shaping modern working class culture.

The following books are required reading for the course. They are available for purchase at the People's Bookstore (458 W. Gilman Street); they are also on reserve in Room 1191, College Library, Helen C. White Hall.

- David Brody, Workers in Industrial America
- Ruth Milkman, ed., Women, Work and Protest
- David Montgomery, Workers' Control in America
- Studs Terkel, Working

*(NOTE: For those of you who want to consult a brief survey text on twentieth century American labor history, there are also copies of James Green, The World of the Worker available for purchase. This is a recommended, not a required text.)*

In addition, there will be a packet of photocopies for you to purchase at Kinkos (620 University Avenue). Copies will also be on reserve at the College Library. These readings are marked by the letter "P".

There will be two papers and a final exam in this course. Each paper will be approximately 6-8 pages long; the first paper will be due on Thursday, February 18th and the second will be due on Thursday, March 31st. Paper topics will be distributed in advance. The final exam will be on Friday, May 13th. Topics for First Paper

Choose one of the following three paper topics, and write an essay of 6-8 pages. Papers are due in class at the beginning of lecture on Thursday, February 23.

1. The year 1919 saw the largest strike wave in American history. Were these strikes a reflection of the radicalism in the American working class? Or, were these strikes simply an attempt to resolve problems with new technology and management in the workplace?

   In your answer you should explain when these strikes occurred, where they occurred, how they were conducted, and how they were related to the early 20th century labor movement.

2. "One of the ironies of the early 20th century American labor movement is that even as millions of unskilled and immigrant workers were filling the nation's mass production industries, the AFL craft unions remained the predominant form of labor organization."

   Evaluate this statement. Is it an accurate description of the American labor movement in the early 20th century? If so, why? If not, why not?

3. In the first two decades of the 20th century, the IWW, the AFL, and the Socialist Party all had significant working class followings; and yet, they consistently feuded among themselves. Which groups of workers were most likely to ally with each organization? What was the appeal of each organization to the workers who supported it? Were the divisions between these groups so large that they could not be overcome?
