Course Description:
This course explores how popular culture over the past 170 years has been a location for racialization (that is, the formation of race identities and ideas) and exploitation as well as for community formation, the creation of new ideas and cultural formations, and resistance. The explosion of forms of media and leisure activities since about 1870 (popular theater and fiction, movies, radio, records, television, etc) means that popular culture increasingly defines people’s daily routines, their ways of socializing and the ways they see the world and become who they are. Who we are as people can not entirely be separated from the media and products we use daily. In addition, virtually everyone participates in popular culture, unlike government politics or high finance or foreign policy, so when we study popular culture in history we study lots of people, not just elites. By looking closely at old popular culture forms and phenomenon we can see the traces of how people formed and challenged social hierarchies, especially race, class, gender and sexual hierarchies, and hopefully better understand the world we inherited.

This is not a lecture class! Your participation will be required on a daily basis, as we discuss readings or popular culture examples in class. I will regularly talk for part of a session in order to set up themes or theories, but you will also be asked to contribute ideas, research findings, and responses to others.

Attendance Policy
Attendance is required because so much of this course happens in class; each unexcused absence over two will lower your final semester grade by one third of a letter grade.

Required Texts
Note: books are available on reserve at the College Library and for purchase at the Rainbow Bookstore Cooperative at 426 W. Gilman Street. Turn right on Gilman from State when walking toward the capitol.

Course Requirements:
1. Participation (10%)
   You will be assigned a number grade (of possible 100) for your participation, based on the quality and quantity of your participation in small and large class discussions.

2. Learn@UW assignments (10%)
   You will be asked to contribute thoughts or questions or other information related to the readings on Learn@UW on a weekly basis. You will receive the assignments via the email list. You must complete all of these brief assignments in order to receive full credit. At least one of the assignments will require you to participate in a small-group blog; this assignment will be graded on a point system. Total number of possible points for all assignments is 100.

3. Position Paper (15%)
This paper will ask you to take a position on a question emerging from Unit 1. 4 pages.

4. Exam I (in class) (20%)
This in-class exam will consist of identifications, short answers, and a short essay. Covers everything in Unit 2, except for Avila. You will receive a study sheet in advance, and will be allowed to bring in one 3x5” index card with notes.

5. Exam II (take home) (20%)
This take-home exam will consist of identifications and an essay. Covers everything in Unit 3 and in Unit 4 through 11/13.

6. Final Paper (25%)
This final paper will be written in response to a question I provide. You will draw upon three sources in order to discuss the question: some aspect of rap; another popular culture form we have discussed in the class; and a popular culture form that you find interesting that we have not discussed in class. You will receive the question and more detailed parameters near the end of the semester. 8 pages.
