Course No.  Title                        Instructor
History 493  Social and Intellectual History of China, 1400 B.C. - 589 A.D.  Lin Yu-sheng

COURSE DESCRIPTION
History 493 is concerned with major topics in the history of Chinese thought, culture, and society from ancient times to the end of the Six Dynasties period. While this course is not conducted at the introductory level, those who have little or no background in classical and traditional Chinese thought and history but are interested in the subject matter, are also welcome if they are prepared to fill the gap by reading the first five chapters of E. O. Reischauer and J. K. Fairbank, East Asia: The Great Tradition in the first three weeks.

The course will focus on the social and cultural backgrounds of the rise of ancient Chinese philosophies; the formation and nature of the Chou feudal society; the origins of Confucian humanism; the metaphysical, ethical, and socio-political theories of classical Confucianism, the doctrines and evolution of classical Taoism, Moism, and Legalism; the establishment of the Chinese imperial state and its impact on Chinese thought; the transformation of Confucianism in the Han; the disintegration of the Han empire and the rise of Neo-Taoism.

Since it is obviously impossible to cover all aspects of the evolution of Chinese thought and society from 1400 B.C. to 589 A.D. in the span of 15 weeks, it seems more interesting and profitable to engage in in-depth analysis of some major topics as mentioned above. The main aspects of the history of Chinese Buddhism will not be discussed. Anyone who is interested in the history of Chinese Buddhism is urged to read independently two excellent studies: E. Zurcher, The Buddhist Conquest of China (Leiden: E. J. Brill, 1959) and Kenneth Ch'en, Buddhism in China (Princeton University Press, 1964; also available in Princeton paperback reprinting edition).

LECTURES
Two lectures and one discussion session each week.

WRITTEN ASSIGNMENTS AND EXAMS

1. One term-paper about 10-15 typewritten double-spaced pages on one of the suggested topics or a topic of your own choice that can be intellectually justified.

2. A final in-class examination on questions (50% identifications; 50% essays) that are distributed in advance.

3. An "Incomplete" is rarely permitted in this course. In other words, it is granted only under extremely unusual circumstances, such as a prolonged serious illness substantiated by a letter of the student's physician.
