COURSE NO. 573
COURSE TITLE Undergraduate Studies in History of Africa, Asia or Latin America (TOPIC: INTELLECTUAL REVOLUTION IN MODERN CHINA, 1898-1949)
INSTRUCTOR Yu-Sheng Lin

COURSE DESCRIPTION

The purpose of this colloquium is to get those undergraduates who are interested in intellectual and cultural change in modern China acquainted with basic works in the field of modern Chinese intellectual history. In guiding members of this colloquium to read the basic works critically and reflectively, they will, I hope, obtain some fundamental knowledge of the problems in Chinese intellectual history from 1898 to 1949 and of basic conceptual analyses of these problems offered by the present state of scholarship in China studies. Specifically, the following topics will be intensively discussed: Chinese cultural and intellectual situations on the eve of Western intrusion; the perspectives through which Chinese intellectuals initially perceived Western ideas; the factors of the rise of the modern Chinese intelligentsia; the origins and nature of Chinese nationalism, iconoclasm, liberalism, and Marxism, and their developing interrelationships; the origins and effects of literary revolution, the prevalence of scientism, etc.

LECTURES

The class will be conducted as a colloquium: each student will be asked to serve as a main speaker on a topic of his particular interest and as a discussant of another topic.

WRITTEN ASSIGNMENTS and EXAMINATIONS

Two medium-length (6-7 pages) analytical papers mainly based on the assigned readings as required. The first paper is due the 6th week, the second one is due the 12th week. There will be no examination for this course.

GRADING SYSTEM

The final grade will be determined according to the following schedule: paper-80%; performance in discussion-20%.
