COURSE DESCRIPTION

Brazil is known for its soccer, its beaches and its music. But it is also the most industrialized country in the Third World. Nonetheless, thirty-five million Brazilians still live in grinding poverty in the Northeast of the country (now suffering from a five-year drought, the longest in Brazilian history). What kind of society does "late industrialization" such as Brazil's produce? What is the effect on those pillars of traditional authority, the military, the church and the landowners? What role have the foreign investors come to play? What of the newly emerging sectors such as labor especially in industrialized São Paulo, and the middle class? Not least important, what can Brazil's vibrant culture tell us about where Brazil has come from and where it is going?

In this course, we will, through extensive reading and intensive discussion, try to understand twentieth-century Brazil as a paradigmatic Third World country, but also as a fascinating society in its own terms.
