This research seminar focuses on the European Enlightenment, the major cultural movement of the eighteenth century. We will start by setting up the social and cultural context of this movement: new social spaces, from coffeehouses to salons, generated the Enlightenment as a collective project and dialogue. In order to give you a sense of the range of Enlightenment thought and genres of expression, we will then examine primary source readings on diverse topics, including politics, economics, social customs, gender, and the body-mind connection. Across these diverse realms, Enlightenment thinkers engaged two crucial questions: How could one understand human interactions according to a new “science of society”? Could one develop theories or models for improving the moral and social quality of these human interactions? For example, thinkers grappled with the question of how politics created human bonds and ordered sociability and power in both civil society and the family. Likewise, novelists and moral anthropologists probed the gendered nature of interpersonal relations as a foundation for civil society and questioned the relationship between European and non-European customs. In the realm of economics, theorists asked how human relationships and experiences would be altered, improved, or hindered by new economic modes of international trade, industry, and the circulation of ever more goods. Finally, philosophes strove to imagine how human physiology, including differences between male and female bodies, underpinned morality and social interactions.

The major purpose of the seminar is to offer students the opportunity to do a primary-source research paper on some aspect of Enlightenment thought. Students can write on diverse topics (including issues not raised in our collective reading), but papers should focus on Enlightenment authors, contexts, and themes. Sources can include novels, political manifestos or political theory, travelogues, moral or medical treatises, works of political economy or philosophy, personal letters, satirical literature, drama, etc.
During the first half of the course, we will do some background reading and sample a variety of primary sources. The second half of the course will be devoted to researching and writing your papers, and also discussing each other’s research projects.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS: The central requirement of this course is a research paper (c. 20-25 pp.) on a topic related to the Enlightenment.
Choice of topic and compilation of bibliography will begin early in the semester, and the second half of the semester will focus primarily on the research and writing of the paper. Short assignments earlier in the semester will be oriented toward preparing you for this final paper. These short assignments include: a short 5-page paper analyzing primary material; a two-page proposal; a bibliography; an outline; a group discussion of topics.
Rough drafts of the final paper are due on Nov. 25 and will be shared & discussed by groups. Final paper is due Dec. 9. Participation in seminar discussions is also a crucial requirement of the course.
