In the late eighteenth century, Europeans wrestled with new concepts of human rights and identity. The Enlightenment had already placed these questions at the heart of its cultural project, when the French Revolution stunned Europe by attempting to reform virtually every aspect of French society, politics, and culture. It overthrew the monarchy in the attempt to create a republic, leveled aristocratic claims to power on behalf of equality and human rights, tried to replace traditional Catholic practice with revolutionary cults or secularism, waged war on Europe in the name of republicanism, and abolished slavery at the urging of slaves revolting in the French Caribbean. This revolution fascinated, converted, repulsed, and intrigued observers in the rest of Europe and the Americas. This History 600 will focus primarily on France and England in the revolutionary era. We will ask on how the revolutionary experience undercut traditional notions of selfhood and identity, and also raised the issue of civil and political rights for people of different religions, classes, races, and genders. In addition to examining political debates and movements, we will use memoirs and letters to explore individual responses to the revolutionary tumult and to think about possible sources for your papers.

The major purpose of the seminar is to offer students the opportunity to do a primary-source research paper on issues of rights or identity in the revolutionary era. Students can write on diverse topics (including issues not raised in our collective reading), but papers should focus on authors, contexts, and themes. Sources can include novels, political manifestos or political theory, travelogues, moral or medical treatises, works of political economy or philosophy, personal letters, satirical literature, drama, etc. During the first half of the course, we will do some background reading and sample a variety of primary sources. The second half of the course will be devoted to researching and writing your papers, and also discussing each other’s research projects.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS: The central requirement of this course is a research paper (c. 20-25 pp.) on a topic related to the revolutionary era. Choice of topic and compilation of bibliography will begin early in the semester, and the second half of the semester will focus primarily on the research and writing of the paper. Short assignments earlier in the semester will be oriented toward preparing you for this final paper. These short assignments include: a short 5-page paper analyzing primary material; a two-page proposal; a bibliography; an outline; a group discussion of topics. Rough drafts of the final paper are due on Nov. 24 and will be shared & discussed by groups. Final paper is due Dec. 15. Participation in seminar discussions is also a crucial requirement of the course.
