Course Description:

This course will provide an introduction to some of the principal methods, theories, and historiographic trends that characterize African history. After an initial discussion of the challenges professional historians confront in thinking and writing about Africa, we will focus on five broad themes: disputing periodization and historical categories; slavery and African life; rethinking colonialism; the relationship between place, memory, and environment; and health and reproduction. Throughout the course you will engage critical questions surrounding the use of non-traditional historical methodologies and the importance of context in the creation of historical sources. This awareness of the problems of source assessment will hopefully provide a critical foundation for your further research on Africa.

Requirements:

1) Written Assignments: The course will ask you to concentrate your efforts on weekly reading, writing, and discussion instead of a lengthy research paper. Beginning in week 2, students will be required to write 3-4 page (double-spaced) reaction papers on each week’s readings. Each student will be required to write ten of these papers over the course of the semester. Rather than summarizing the readings, your papers should engage them by raising critical questions about the methods, theories, and conclusions put forward by their authors. In short, you should critically assess and analyze the contents of the book and discuss their significance. What contribution do you feel the book makes to African history, how does it do so, and by what methodology? What are the author’s outstanding contributions? What are the shortfalls of the book? Students are encouraged in their papers to build upon the readings from previous weeks and to use supplementary readings as necessary. You may wish to peruse the book review section in the Journal of African History as a guide. Students will e-mail their papers to me by 3:00 pm on the Thursday before our class meeting on Friday.
2) Weekly discussions of the assigned readings are a crucial component of the seminar. You should come to class prepared to share your thoughts on the assigned readings and to actively participate in discussion. Each week, one to two students will be assigned to facilitate the discussion.
