COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Media culture entertains us with visions of how we see ourselves and the world we live in. It creates pleasure in consuming certain ways of being in the world while trivializing others. Because of its powerful ability to shape our sense of self and community, this course examines how changes in the economies of media culture influence the ideas that are promoted within media culture but also how these ideas become “popular” and socially desirable. Throughout this semester, we will explore how certain ways of being in the world are encoded in contemporary advertisements, television, film, music, sports, internet, and video games and how these understandings become commodified, produced, distributed, and consumed.

For example, we will explore how in our profit driven economy the World Wrestling Entertainment (WWE) has commodified and distributed the sport of wrestling through the price of an admissions ticket or a pay per view fee. Moreover, we will consider how technological devices such as the video camera dictate how we are to see the stunts, what to look for, and which ideas or performances get replayed. As these processes also shape the types of personalities, images, and social interactions to be promoted and repackaged in order to secure a returning consumer base, we will decode the complex and often contradictory meanings behind what it means to be a “normal” man and woman in WWE and how they are to interact with each other and among themselves. It is a vision that elicit ideas about race, class, and sexuality to create the socially desirable man and woman.

The kinds of questions explored in this course along with the analysis they produce are indeed subversive; they break the cardinal rule that entertainment is “fun” and thus a guarded time to “not think” and “not to read too much into things.” This course interrogates this line of thinking by asking who or what social and economic systems profit from our tuning out? It teaches that the study of popular culture is indeed “fun” and critical to understanding how meanings of who we are become constructed and distributed in society.

This course consists of unannounced quizzes, two examinations, two short critical analysis papers, and lecture attendance.

Course Policies:

Attendance: Regular and prompt attendance, active participation, and mature attentiveness during lecture meetings are mandatory. The professor will not distribute lecture notes via e-mail for students who miss lecture nor will lecture notes be posted on the course webpage. There are no excused absences for lecture.

Readings: Students are expected to complete each week’s required readings before that Tuesday’s lecture.

Quizzes, Writing Assignments, and Examinations: There will be unannounced quizzes on course materials in lecture. Quizzes will always be administered during the first ten to fifteen minutes of class. There will be no make-up quizzes given, without exception. Assignments are always due during the first ten minutes of lecture. Any assignment received after the first ten minutes of lecture on the due date is considered late and will not be evaluated or credited. No late work will be accepted, without exception. E-mailed submissions of papers are not permitted and will not be credited or graded, without exception. Exam 1 and Final Exam 2 will be given according to the schedule indicated in the course syllabus and according to university schedule, without exception. No incompletes will be granted for the course except in cases of personal emergencies, subject to the prompt notification of the professor, valid documentation of the particular emergency, and the discretion of the professor. Students are responsible for retaining a copy of all exams, quizzes, and assignments.

Honesty: Please read the university policy on plagiarism. All information borrowed from print sources or the internet must be clearly identified and properly credited. Any instance of plagiarism or cheating on exams, quizzes, and written assignments will result in an “F” grade for the assignment and the course.

Abilities: Any student who feels that he or she may need special accommodation due to a disability should contact me privately. Please also contact the McBurney Disability Resource Center (http://www.mcburney.wisc.edu/) at 608-263-2741 (phone); 263-6393 (TTY); 263-2998 (FAX); FrontDesk@mcb.wisc.edu to ensure that accommodations are implemented in a timely fashion.

Ground Rules: This course is open to a variety of ways of interpreting popular culture and students are encouraged to share their questions and ideas in lecture and discussion sections. Since there will be differences and disagreements, students are expected to show respect to the comments and positions of fellow students and the professor.

Each student is warmly encouraged to meet with the professor during office hours and by appointment.
