COURSE DESCRIPTION
This course will address the problem of magic in European society ca. 1400-1700. We will read a selection of landmark studies that chart the importance of illicit belief in ordinary people’s struggle to endure and make meaning in a precarious world. We will ask, what role did soothsaying, healing, charms, and curses play in early modern communities? Why did authorities like the State and Church seek to control these popular practices? How did anti-witchcraft initiatives drive new allocations of power? And how did this process birth a society we recognize as modern?

The readings in this course span the breadth of early modern Europe. We will explore texts about men and women, the rural and the urban, the wealthy and the impoverished, the powerful and the disenfranchised. However, we will always return to our central topics: community dynamics; popular resistance to sanctioned doctrine; officials’ march towards discipline; the creative appropriation of religion; gender; sexuality; and survival. By tracking the social, spiritual, and intellectual transformations incubated in early modern localities, students will strive to better understand the lived mentalities and perspectives of historical actors.

COURSE LEARNING OUTCOMES
This course aims to facilitate student progress across three primary areas: content knowledge, general skills, and critical thinking. Students will gain a solid foundation in the social, religious, and cultural upheavals that drove the witch-hunts of early modern Europe. Students will also hone their abilities as readers and writers. Finally, they will practice asking provocative questions, testing claims against evidence, and elaborating logical connections.

TEXTBOOKS
- Peter A. Morton, ed., The Bedevilment of Elizabeth Lorentz (University of Toronto Press, 2018).

ASSIGNMENTS

Students in History 201 respond to semiweekly reading reflection prompts on the course’s Canvas discussion board. Posts will be due on Tuesdays and Fridays at 6:00pm Central Time.

Students will also complete one three-page historiography paper and two five-page directed primary source papers. Prompts for these papers will be distributed closer to the due date. The prompts will be interpretive and require critical thinking about the texts.

As the capstone project for this course, students will compose a final paper of 8-10 pages based on independent primary and secondary source research. With assistance from the instructor, students will select a historical incident of witchcraft, diabolism, or magic to analyze, and will produce an original argument that puts their incident in conversation with the other texts studied in this course.

To fulfill the oral communication objective of a Comm-B course, students will also give two five-minute speeches. For the first speech, students will assume the persona of a character from The Sorcerer’s Tale and perform a courtroom monologue arguing for the guilt or innocence of the magician Gregory Wisdom. For the second speech, students will present an overview of their final paper and its findings.

All assignments will be submitted online through Canvas.

PLAGIARISM

One of the fundamental principles of this university is that “academic honesty and integrity are fundamental to the mission of higher education and of the University of Wisconsin system” (Wisconsin Administrative Code 14.01). While what constitutes in-class cheating (copying the work of others, unauthorized use of prepared notes, etc.) is often obvious to students, plagiarism merits further elaboration.
Plagiarism is…
- Using someone else’s words or ideas without proper documentation.
- Copying some portion of your text from another source without proper acknowledgement of indebtedness.
- Borrowing another person’s specific ideas without documenting their source.
- Having another person correct or revise your work. This differs from getting feedback from a writing group, or from an individual, which you then attempt to implement.
- Turning in a paper written by another person, from an essay “service,” or from a website (including reproductions of such essays or papers).

Writing handbooks are excellent sources for learning how to avoid plagiarism. The writing center has an online handbook that can be accessed at www.wisc.edu/writing. And of course, you may always talk with me if you have any questions about plagiarism.

EMAIL POLICY
My email address is amain2@wisc.edu. I will respond to all emails by the end of the following business day at the latest. For emails relating to specific assignments, be sure to email at least one business day in advance to guarantee a timely response.
