Histories of Migration and Citizenship in Europe and the United States a roundtable

Who gets to be a citizen? Who decides the answer to this question--and on what basis? When does citizenship become a flashpoint for political conflict? How do migration and mobility shape competing citizenship claims? Such high-stakes questions dominate contemporary discussions of citizenship, both as a political and legal category and as lived experience. But the problem of citizenship has its own complicated history.

This roundtable brings together three scholars of European and US history--Celia Donert (University of Cambridge, UK), Emily Greble (Vanderbilt University), and Marla Ramirez (UW-Madison)--for a conversation about the development of citizenship practices in the modern world. The roundtable will be chaired by Brandon Bloch and Kathryn Ciancia.
