Course Description

“I am. I am what they left behind, I am the leftovers of what they have stolen... I am Latin America, a country without legs but still walking,” sang the Puerto Rican rap group Calle 13 in their track “Latinoamérica.” Like Calle 13, many scholars have used similar analogies to describe the region: “born in blood and fire,” “the empire’s backyard,” and a body with “open veins,” among others. But the territories we understand as Latin America are also marked by histories of resistance, resilience, and revolution. Indigenous leaders like Tupac Amaru, the formerly enslaved Toussaint Louverture, and the anarcho-feminist Virginia Bolten have inspired generations of people, from revolutionaries to Hip Hop artists. Given these complexities, there is not a history of Latin America; there are many. In fact, it is difference and plurality what best defines the regions we identify today as Latin America and the Caribbean. For example, there are more than 600 hundred languages spoken by countless ethnic and cultural groups. Nonetheless, the region’s imperial legacy made Spanish and Portuguese its main two languages.

This course intends to serve as an introduction to the histories of Latin American and Caribbean societies, peoples, and nations from pre-Colombian societies to the present day. The course focuses on the region’s ever incomplete nation-building processes. Using an intersectional lens, we will not only look at events but to how different people interpreted them through their own gender, class, and racial identities. While students will use John Charles Chasteen’s Born in Blood and Fire as their textbook and guide, it will be complemented with other readings and primary sources that allow a deeper analysis of the processes studied.

The course begins with the pre-Columbian societies and moves towards the post-independent moment, and the rise of nationalist ideologies. We will read about the ways women subverted the era’s patriarchal ethos through subtle acts of resistance while paying attention to the ways non-whites were racialized. The course then moves to explore the ways populism developed in the mid-twentieth century to the more recent rise in neoliberal policies.

Introduction, Goals, and Objectives

What constitutes Latin America and the Caribbean? And, how can we approach the region’s diverse cultures, societies, and histories? These are some of the questions this course seeks to engage with throughout the semester. The course also emphasizes that Latin America and the Caribbean have played a crucial, albeit unrecognized role in global developments. The expansion of Western thought throughout the globe after the 1500s required the colonization of what is now considered “the Global South.” After the Latin American and Caribbean wars for independence, metropolitan powers still maintained economic and political control over some their former colonies. European powers re-defined themselves after, and through, the conquest of the Americas.

One of the goals of the course is to help students build their own historical toolbox. Using ideas discussed in lectures, students will produce historical knowledge through their analysis of primary and secondary sources from Latin America and the Caribbean. Students will get workshop and discuss these sources to question documents, preconceived ideas, and overarching narratives. Throughout the course, students will also have the chance to write a book review.

Ultimately, the course aspires to help students comprehend contemporary events through the study of the regions’ past. To do so, throughout the semester we will look at global politics and events from within Latin America. Thus, the course seeks to position Latin America and the Caribbean at the center of our historical imagination and perception of the world. Doing so will entail exploring the regions’ relationship to its Northern neighbor, the United States, as well as Europe, Asia, and Africa.

By the end of this course students will:

1. Write an academic book review and develop an interactive map of Latin American and the Caribbean.
2. Recognize different nation-building moments as well as their importance in broader regional development.
3. Appreciate some of the similarities and differences between Latin American countries at moments of nation-building, revolution, and capitalist consolidation.
4. Situate the histories of Latin America and the Caribbean in the broader context of World History.
5. Integrate a historical analysis to their interpretations of the regions’ contemporary events.

Textbook:

Polishing Your Historian’s Toolbox

Someone might look at this syllabus and ask: Why is it important to take a Latin America course that uses a historical lens? Do I have to memorize dates and historical figures? Why should I care about Latin America or the Caribbean if I want to become a [insert profession here]? While these are valid inquiries, they are rooted in misconceptions about what history as a discipline is.

For instance, this course will encourage critical thinking over memorization. The study of history can offer great tools to analyze multiple, and often contradictory, sources and arguments to create historical knowledge. Living in an era where information and data can be accessed immediately at the touch of our fingertips through the internet, this class will seek to disrupt the idea of history as the memorization of great Men’s names [as women are mostly left out of narratives] and events.

Throughout the semester, we will use Latin America and the Caribbean to explore historical events and processes not only in those regions but also on a global scale. That is, the course hopes to bring “Global South” to the center of our analyses to disrupt Western-centric conceptions of history.

While doing all that hard work of disrupting pre-conceived notions and ideas, you will also be managing and polishing a set of transferable skills. First, and foremost, you will use critical thinking skills to analyze the course’s content. You will also be able to craft well informed arguments based on the scrutiny and analysis of multiple types of sources (known in other fields as “data;” a fancier, more imposing word). By the end of the course, you will be able to develop appreciation to cultures, peoples, customs, and histories other than your own. Finally, while this class will encourage active engagement, you will do most of the thinking (which is what historians often do) by yourself, thus learning how to undertake self-directed learning.

Information on the Assignments:

- Mid-term: The test will consist of questions that will allow you to engage with the class readings and lectures critically.

- Primary Source Analysis: Find a primary source related to the Caribbean (you can consult Profe Meléndez-Badillo if you need help choosing one). Write a short reflection (500-900 words) after doing a critical reading of the text. Your reflection should take into consideration the following:
  - When was the text produced? Why was it produced?
  - How does the text allow you to contextualize the historical moment in which it was produced?
  - What questions did the text generate for you?
  - What was not said in the text?
  - What does this primary source add to your understanding of this week’s topics?

Please note that these questions serve as a guide, and you do not necessarily need to address them one by one in your reflection. Ultimately, this exercise is for you to think as a historian and critically question the document. As we have discussed in our classes, history is about power relations. Think about how you can unearth those power relations within the primary source you have selected.

- Podcast: In the spirit of experimenting with knowledge production in the classroom, students will be creating a podcast where they present original research related to the class. This will be a group project.

  Profe will divide the class into thematic groups (i.e., The Mexican Revolution, Pre-Columbian Societies, or The Pink Tide), and students in that group will each select their topic according to the group's theme. This is also a two-part assignment. Students need to submit the podcast’s written narrative of about 750-to-1,000 words on April 13, 2023, at noon. More information about the assignment will be shared during the semester.

  The date for the final podcast submission is April 27, 2023.

- Final Exam: Sunday, May 7, 2023.

Credit Hours and Student Workload:

This four-credit class carries the expectation that students will work on course learning activities (reading, writing, problem sets, studying, among others) for about 4 hours out of the classroom for every class period (8 hours total). Below you will find more information about expectations for undergraduate and graduate student work.

Grades:

Grades on assignments and exams are recorded as numerical scores out of a total of 100 points (these scores are later weighted to arrive at a final composite course grade). The table for converting your final composite (weighted) numerical grade into final letter grades is as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Points</th>
<th>&lt;60</th>
<th>60-68.9</th>
<th>69-74.9</th>
<th>75-80.9</th>

- Students must submit all assignments and complete all essays to pass this course.
- Students may not elect to opt out of an assignment and receive an F on it.
- Any non-emergency extensions must be requested prior to the due date.
Course Website and Digital Instructional Tools

This course will use Canvas. You can find all the readings that are not part of the required books in the Canvas page.

General Information About the Course

1. Use office hours if you have any questions, comments, or doubts about the readings, lectures, assignments, or discussions. If you cannot attend office hours, you can contact me to schedule an appointment.

2. If you have any other question that can be answered with a few sentences and that is not answered in this syllabus, feel free to email me. If I have not replied within two (2) weekdays, please follow up with me.

3. Students are expected to read all the assigned material. Regular attendance to class and active, engaging participation is also expected from every student.

4. If, for some reason, you cannot meet a major assignment deadline, please contact me before the assignment is due. If you have not contacted me and you have to miss a deadline, you have one opportunity to hand it in the NEXT DAY (not the next class). There will be a 10% tardiness reduction to your grade for each day that goes by (except for those students that present a valid medical excuse). The second time you cannot submit your assignment late except with a valid medical excuse.

5. Check your email and Canvas periodically to check for any announcement, posting, changes in the readings, or any other information pertaining the class.

Course Policies:

Teaching and Learning Data Transparency Statement

The privacy and security of faculty, staff and students’ personal information is a top priority for UW-Madison. The university carefully reviews and vets all campus-supported digital tools used to support teaching and learning, to help support success through learning analytics, and to enable proctoring capabilities. View the university’s full teaching and learning data transparency statement.

Privacy of Student Records and the Use of Audio Recorded Lectures Statement
Lecture materials and recordings for this course are protected intellectual property at UW-Madison. Students in courses may use the materials and recordings for their personal use related to participation in class. Students may also take notes solely for their personal use. If a lecture is not already recorded, students are not authorized to record lectures without permission unless they are considered by the university to be a qualified student with a disability who has an approved accommodation that includes recording. [Regent Policy Document 4-1] Students may not copy or have lecture materials and recordings outside of class, including posting on internet sites or selling to commercial entities, with the exception of sharing copies of personal notes as a notetaker through the McBurney disability resource center. Students are otherwise prohibited from providing or selling their personal notes to anyone else or being paid for taking notes by any person or commercial firm without the instructor’s express written permission. Unauthorized use of these copyrighted lecture materials and recordings constitutes copyright infringement and may be addressed under the university’s policies, UWs chapters 14 and 17, governing student academic and non-academic misconduct. Course Evaluations

Students will be provided with an opportunity to evaluate their enrolled courses and their learning experience. Student participation is an integral component of course development, and confidential feedback is important to the institution. UW-Madison strongly encourages student participation in course evaluations.

Digital Course Evaluation

UW-Madison uses a digital course evaluation survey tool. In most instances, students receive an official email two weeks prior to the end of the semester, notifying them that course evaluations are available. Students receive an email with a link to log into the course evaluation with their netid. Evaluations are anonymous. Student participation is an integral component of course development, and feedback is important. UW-Madison strongly encourages student participation in course evaluations.

Students’ Rules, Rights & Responsibilities

[Rights & Responsibilities]
Diversity & inclusion statement

Diversity is a source of strength, creativity, and innovation for UW-Madison. We value the contributions of each person and respect the profound ways their identity, culture, background, experience, status, abilities, and opinion enrich the university community. We commit ourselves to the pursuit of excellence in teaching, research, outreach, and diversity as inextricably linked goals. The University of Wisconsin-Madison fulfills its public mission by creating a welcoming and inclusive community for people from every background – people who as students, faculty, and staff serve Wisconsin and the world.

Academic integrity statement

By virtue of enrollment, each student agrees to uphold the high academic standards of the University of Wisconsin-Madison; academic misconduct is behavior that negatively impacts the integrity of the institution. Cheating, fabrication, plagiarism, unauthorized collaboration, and helping others commit these previously listed acts are examples of misconduct which may result in disciplinary action. Examples of disciplinary sanctions include, but are not limited to, failure on the assignment/course, written reprimand, disciplinary probation, suspension, or expulsion.

Accommodations for students with disabilities

The University of Wisconsin-Madison supports the right of all enrolled students to a full and equal educational opportunity. The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), Wisconsin state statute (36.12), and UW-Madison policy (uw-855) require the university to provide reasonable accommodations to students with disabilities to access and participate in its academic programs and educational services. Faculty and students share responsibility in the accommodation process. Students are expected to inform faculty of their need for instructional accommodations during the beginning of the semester, or as soon as possible after being approved for accommodations. Faculty will work either directly with the student or in coordination with the McBurney Center to provide reasonable instructional and course-related accommodations. Disability information, including instructional accommodations as part of a student's educational record, is confidential and protected under FERPA. (see: McBurney Disability Resource Center)
